“Return to Kenya”

Eight years have come and gone since the last time I was in Kenya. One time after hearing me teach on “Biblical Stewardship,” and taking care of what has been given to you, a member of the church went home and got a trash can for his house. Many people may not see the great significance of somebody simply putting a trash can in their house however, the process of training an individual to live wisely starts in being good managers in the little things. An example of educating people in the simple things is when we were younger our parents encouraged us to make our own beds which started the process of training us to be good stewards. Training others to be good stewards of what they have lays the foundation for greater levels of responsibility to be imparted to them which causes greater freedom in their lives and in turn brings liberty to mankind.

I had the opportunity and pleasure of teaching on “The Biblical Principles of Economics,” to pastors and leaders (two pictures below) of a church district in Kisumu located in western Kenya. These pastors and church leaders appreciated the teachings that my teammate

Lawrence and I gave since they taught very practical applications of scripture to everyday life. They understand that what was given to them helps bring liberty to mankind. The leaders of several different churches expressed how much they desire for future teams to come to Kisumu. They also want Youth With a Mission to come and establish a ministry location in Kisumu with the hopes that a School of the Bible training course would begin later.

“What’s with the Dome Head?”

The spring issue of “The Frontier,” featured a story about my friend Alina whom I have known for several years, graduating from high school. She was interested in attending a private college and was having problems passing one of the entrance exams. Before Alina took the test for the last time, I offered that she could shave my head if she passed the exam. Well, she did and the rest including my hair (pictured above-right) is history.

Prayer Requests:

- Continue to develop a deeper, loving relationship with Jesus Christ
- Working with the new school and Responsibilities
- Go on a vacation with friends
